PSYCH 3300 Transgender Identities

Catalog

2016-2017

Course Description

What does it mean to be transgender? What can transgender identities tell us about larger societal gender systems? This course is an interdisciplinary exploration of transgender issues in the United States. Students will investigate the variety of transgender identities, the lived experiences of transgender people, and the differing perspectives surrounding transgender issues. Topics will include explanations of gender diversity, discrimination, elements of gender transitions, medical and psychological treatment options, and gender privilege.
