Nebraska Wesleyan University

SOC 3370 Social Inequality

Catalog

2025-2026

Course Description

This course explores social stratification, the socially created pattern of unequal distribution of social resources that leads to social inequality. It gives particular attention to social class, but also considers how class intersects with other social categories (such as race/ethnicity and gender) to create even further inequality. It also examines the interconnectedness of social inequality and the primary social institutions of U.S. society. It also explores global social inequality.
Prerequisite(s): Sophomore standing.
(Normally offered alternate years.)
